THE STORM OF SATURDAY LAST, did not pass without leaving its track in portions Saturday Morning, July 9, 1859. Hastsgrove, writes to the Scatinel that in that region, it amounted to a tornado, spreading ruin and destruction in its course. Houses and barus were unroofed, exposing lowed; forests and orchards were wholly or partially destroyed, while fences were literally strewn over the fields. Persons in the fields or roads, were blown off their feet: and so silently and suddenly did the storm approach that few were able to escape to a shelter. The Rev. W. Wilson, with his horse and carriage, was blown off the highway into an adjoining field where he was found after the storm, in a perilous situation, and seriously injured.

"Ashtabula Telegraph." OR 1853, '54, and '55 .- I have quite an extended list of "Patrons" for those years, who are till indebted to me, on subscription and for adverting. Is it sot about time these were paid?

Persons calling on the present Editor and Proprietor, who are in arrears for those years, can readily learn, that settlements made with him, do not include arrears due to me.

I hope those interested will act on this appeal without further delay, and PAY UP, and oblige.
